lasting MEMORIES

1 Giggles all around, seniors Tessa Williamson and Megan Pipkens will do anything to keep warm. Even if it comes down to squishing into a small sleeping bag.

3 "Okay, what are you doing wrong, what should you do to change that, okay go do it!" are the encouraging words that senior doubles partners Andria McCabe and Danielle Burt often received from Coach Pat Somers.

5 To play first singles, is to play the best of the best. But senior Emily Stocker came out strong each time and made a name for herself.

In a dog pile on a three seater couch seniors Holly Warner, Tracy Wilburn, Danielle Burt and juniors Beth Mastin, Jenny Hill and sophomore Mia Thereox have fun on a Saturday night.

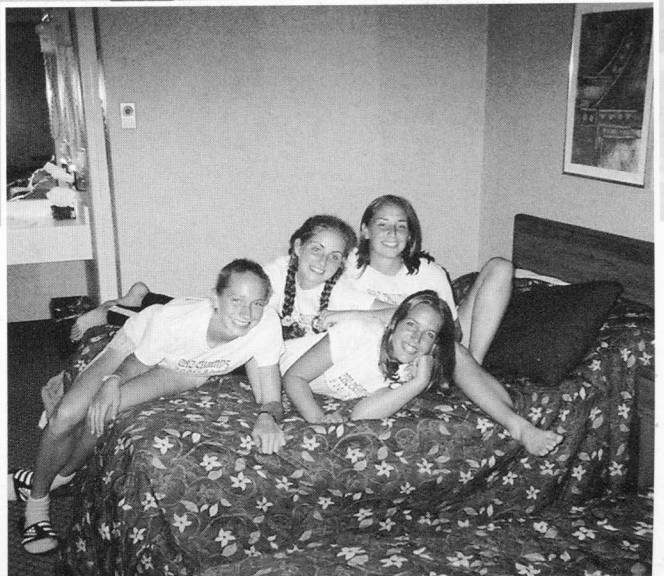

Not wanting to lose her ball, junior Beth Mastin rushes to chip it out of the water before the team moves on to the next hole.

DOMINANCE

"They're sweet like a hostess treat," said Mike Smith when asked to express his feelings about the performance of the womens tennis team. Smith's daughter Sarah is among one of the underclassmen on a senior-dominated team. With seniors having a slight majority over underclassmen, the atmosphere of the team was exciting, competitive and all-around fun.

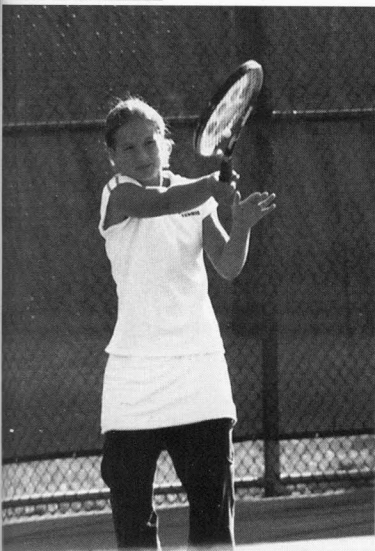

Dedication and the drive to make it to States were at an all-time high. Seniors wanted their last year to be the best. This was the first time that Holt received first place at regionals. A large factor contributing to their success were the close bonds. On and off the courts, the team could be found together on many occasions. Through going to play putt-putt golf, having sleepovers, and frequent trips to Fazzoli's and Flapjacks, lasting friendships were made. "I'm going to cry at the banquet -- we'll all cry -- we're going to miss everyone, especially the seniors," said junior Beth Mastin.

While the team loves tennis and each other, they tend to be a little weary when it comes to some of their traditions. "You know something's not normal when you go to Flapjacks for breakfast and they don't open that early," said sophomore Mia Theroux. "We ended up having to go to Denny's!" It is a tradition that when attending weekend events or on days that the team gets out of school for competition, they go out to breakfast before competing. "I wanted to kick them all in the face when I got there and actually realized where I was, and to top it all off a homeless guy tried to give me his pencil. That didn't do too much for my appetite," joked Mastin. The team may not like getting up early but most agree that it would feel incomplete if the tradition was not upheld.

Following traditions, increasing team bonding, and fierce determination led the team to first place spots at the St. Johns invitational, CAC's, regionals, Holt invitational, and to twelfth place at States. The seniors got their wish for a great year of success, and underclassmen look forward to continuing to make a better name for Holt tennis.
